Perfect Little Storm for Comeback in Mortgage Apps

It was a full week after a holiday foreshortened one and also the week in which the long awaited Federal Open Market Committee move to begin interest rate increases was widely anticipated to happen. Thus it was hard to know how much of the week's ballooning mortgage application volume was attributable to Labor Day-delayed business activity and how much was generated by see-sawing interest rates after the Feds failed to act. In most cases the various volume indices rose by percentages about equal to their aggregate declines over the two prior holiday-impacted weeks.

The Mortgage Bankers Association (MBA) reports that the week ended September 18 saw a 13.9 percent increase in mortgage applications on a seasonally adjusted basis compared to the week ended September 11. On an unadjusted basis the MBA's Market Composite Index was up 26 percent. The previous week's data included an adjustment to account for the holiday.

The Refinance Index rose 18 percent and the refinance share of applications was 58.4 percent compared to 56.2 percent a week earlier. The seasonally adjusted Purchase Index increased 9 percent to its highest level since June. The unadjusted Purchase Index was up 20 percent week-over-week and was 27 percent higher than the same week in 2014.

Mike Fratantoni, MBA's Chief Economist said, "We saw significant rate volatility last week surrounding the FOMC meeting, and rate declines toward the end of the week likely drove applications from both prospective home buyers and borrowers looking to refinance. The 30-year fixed rate remained unchanged over the week even though there was substantial intra-week fluctuation, but we saw rate decreases in other loan products like the 15-year fixed, 5/1 ARM, and 30-year jumbo."

The FHA share of total applications decreased to 12.9 percent from 14.2 percent and the VA share dipped to 10.0 percent from 10.7 percent. The USDA share of total applications decreased to 0.7 percent from 0.8 percent the previous week.
