Housing Starts, Building Permits Slowed in August

All three measures of residential construction activity fell in August compared to the July numbers and one, building permits, continued to lag year-ago levels. The report from the U.S. Census Bureau and the Department of Housing and Urban Development showed the early stages of construction activity in the South was especially muted.

Permits for construction of residential units were issued in August as a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1,139,000. This was only a fractional (0.4) decline from July, but the number for that month, originally reported at 1.152.000 units, already an 0.1 percent loss from June, was revised down to 1,144,000 units. Last month's rate of permitting was 2.3 percent below the rate of 1,166,000 in August 2015.

The August estimate was well below the low end of estimates provided by analysts to Econoday. Expectations were for a number in the range of 1.153 million to 1.195 million with a consensus of 1.167 million.

Permitting for single family construction rose during the month with a seasonally adjusted estimate of 737,000, an increase of 3.7 percent from July and reversing a 3.7 percent drop in that metric from June. Permits for construction of units in building of five or more was at a rate of 370,000, a decline of 8.4 percent from July and 13.1 percent from a year earlier. The July multi-family number was revised from 411,000 units to 404,000 on a seasonally adjusted annual basis.

On a non-adjusted basis there were an estimated 107,000 permits issued in August compared to 95,100 in July. Single-family permits totaled 71,300, a gain of slightly more than 10,000 compared to the previous month.

Starts of privately funded construction of housing units in August were at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1,142,000 units, a drop of 5.8 percent from July when starts were estimated at 1,212,000, a slight upward revision from the original estimate. Starts were incrementally higher, 0.9 percent, than those a year earlier.

Analysts had been looking for housing starts to come in within a range of 1.153 to 1.195 million units. The consensus was 1.152 million.
