Mortgage Rates Lowest in Nearly a Year

Mortgage rates have been plummeting, depending on your definition of the word. To be sure, the past 2 months have no competition in nearly 3 years. The past few days have been special in their own right. Whereas there was cause for concern about the new year bringing a bounce for stock prices and mortgage rates, stocks haven't done much of anything in the context of their late-2018 volatility, and mortgage rates have dropped another eighth of a percentage point (or more, depending on the lender).

There are now lenders quoting 30yr fixed rates as low as 4.375% on top tier scenarios with the average lender back to 4.5%. That's quite a jump from the 5.125% average at the recent highs (just 2 months ago).

There's still risk associated with the new year, however. Tomorrow's jobs report is still a potential flashpoint for volatility. Make sure you have a gameplan to account for positive or negative outcomes tomorrow. Things could be happening quickly fairly early in the morning.
