UPDATE: Giving Up Some Overnight Gains as Stocks Bounce

- Stocks and bond yields both lower overnight
- NY Fed Manufacturing and Industrial Production data both had limited effect
- Bonds were more moved by stock market improvement

Today's trading range is very narrow so far, with 10yr yields not making any new lows or highs vs yesterday (taking overnight trading into consideration). Stocks and bond yields were lower to start the day, but have been moving higher together. Neither has had much, if any, regard for this morning's economic data. Indeed, bond weakness and stock strength followed hard on the heels of weaker Industrial Production data--exactly the opposite outcome suggested by quintessential relationship between markets and data (i.e. weaker data = weaker stocks and lower rates).

The takeaway is that it will likely continue making sense to keep an eye on stock market movement in light of the big-picture considerations discussed in the Day Ahead.

Economic data is done for the day, and never moved the needle, but here's a rundown if you're interested:

NY Fed Empire State Manufacturing

- NY FED'S EMPIRE STATE CURRENT BUSINESS CONDITIONS INDEX +9.56 IN APRIL (CONSENSUS +2.21) VS +0.62 IN MARCH
