

Rich E. Blanchard

Managing Director, RICH Home Loans LLC
 NMLS: 492461
 1550 Wewatta St., 2nd Floor Denver, CO 80202

Office: 720.619.9900
 Mobile: 303.328.7047
 Fax: 214.975.2874
richblanchard@richhomeloans.com
View My Website

The Day Ahead: Bernanke, Japan, Bank of England, and Reflation

Back in the good old days during the infancy of the financial crisis, much was made of Bernanke's study of Japan's massive, long term, secular deflationary cycle. Bernanke figured there were clear lessons to be learned from what, at the time, seemed like mistakes made in Japan.

The best way to sum up those 'mistakes' would simply be to say that Japan's monetary policy response to its deflationary problems was "too little, too late," and that it would ideally be coordinated with a fiscal response (where "monetary policy" refers to what the central bank does and where "fiscal policy" refers to what the government does).

As you might remember from some of Bernanke's more passionate exchanges with his friends in Congress, The Fed generally felt like its hands were increasingly tied and that more of a fiscal response was needed (as opposed to monetary policy being expected to act as the lone salvation of growth and inflation).

Bernanke's endgame for congressional inaction was so-called "helicopter money." It's exactly what it sounds like: the Fed would figuratively drop money from the sky for the general public to gobble up, but with the important promise being that more money was on the way. This, Bernanke figured, was the way in which Monetary Policy could still have teeth even when Fiscal Policy had failed (or simply didn't even try).

It never quite came to that in the US (or it hasn't yet...), but it may come to that in Japan, where policy rates have been under 0.5% since 1995. In fact, speculation has been increasing that Japan will announce "something new" at this month's policy meeting.

The frosting on the proverbial cake of speculation has been a series of visits to Japan by Bernanke himself. During those visits, he's been in closed-door meetings with the Japanese Prime Minister and the head of Japan's central bank. With no press coverage allowed and no on-record comments from any of the parties involved, you know they're not just getting together for some friendly chit chat.

Speculation is that Bernanke is consulting on the world's first ever Helicopter Money drop. It would be just another in a series of increasingly desperate measures to re-stoke the fires of inflation. Meanwhile the Bank of England is likely to hum a few bars of the same tune on Thursday when it (probably)

MBS & Treasury Market Data

	Price / Yield	Change
MBS UMBS 6.0	100.61	+0.22
MBS GNMA 6.0	100.74	+0.21
10 YR Treasury	4.2954	+0.0136
30 YR Treasury	4.4890	+0.0033

Pricing as of: 7/8 3:54AM EST

Average Mortgage Rates

	Rate	Change	Points
Mortgage News Daily
30 Yr. Fixed	7.03%	-0.05	0.00
15 Yr. Fixed	6.44%	-0.01	0.00
30 Yr. FHA	6.50%	-0.05	0.00
30 Yr. Jumbo	7.24%	-0.01	0.00
5/1 ARM	7.05%	-0.02	0.00
Freddie Mac
30 Yr. Fixed	6.95%	+0.09	0.00
15 Yr. Fixed	6.25%	+0.09	0.00
Mortgage Bankers Assoc.
30 Yr. Fixed	7.03%	+0.09	0.62
15 Yr. Fixed	6.56%	+0.09	0.54
30 Yr. FHA	6.90%	+0.11	0.95
30 Yr. Jumbo	7.11%	-0.01	0.50
5/1 ARM	6.38%	+0.11	0.54

Rates as of: 7/5

announces a cut to its policy rate.

Every time central banks up the ante on the aforementioned desperation, a bit of a ripple goes through financial markets where traders express a bit of fear about "the reflation trade." In other words, one trader might say to another: "damn, it really looks like these crazy bastards are serious about trying to get some inflation going. They probably can't pull it off, but what if they do?"

"What if they do" is a question that is expressed in this week's bond market weakness--at least in part. We're also finally dealing with that technical pull back that never really materialized on the first few days of moderate weakness after hitting all-time low bond yields.

In other words, yes... this is one of those periodic pull-backs. We don't know how long it will last, but the best case is that we see a consolidation and bounce back after the week's auction cycle ends tomorrow. Markets could be waiting for Thursday's Bank of England announcement, however, or even Friday's domestic economic data to corroborate the rosier picture painted by last week's NFP.

If bonds indeed move weaker, I'm primarily interested in the 1.53% area in 10yr yields as a battleground where inclined buyers would have a major opportunity to get back into the market. If we see a nice, big bounce there or before, it's a good thing, and we can consider the past few days to have been a healthy pull-back. If yields blow through 1.53 and head higher, we'll know a new game is afoot.

Subscribe to my newsletter online at: <http://housingnewsletters.com/richhomeloans>

Expert Advice | Exceptional Service | Flawless Execution

With 27+ years of expertise in mortgage banking you can be confident in my knowledge and abilities to deliver a seamless loan transaction while providing personalized service.

Rich E. Blanchard

