UPDATE: Bonds Recover After Opening Weaker

MBS and Treasuries were both weaker to start the session, but have moved back into positive territory in the past half hour. There has been an absolute deluge of comments from various Fed speakers during this time (some of them not "comments" per se, but newswires pulled from prepared remarks). I'll post several of the wires below, but here is a recap:

- Essentially no one on the Fed thinks negative rates would be a good idea.
- The economy is dependent on coronavirus and will likely need more stimulus
- Rates expected to stay lower for longer
- Explicit QE announcement likely coming

In addition to the Fed speakers, stocks fell at the 9:30am NYSE open and that seemed to bring some "risk-off" buyers into the bond market. One could just as easily make a case for technical support as 10yr yields approached the .74% pivot point (highs from May 6th--highest levels since April 15th). This zone around .72-.74% would be greatly reinforced if it remains supportive through today's 10yr Treasury auction (1pm).

10yr yields are currently down 1bp on the day at .699. 2.5 UMBS are up 1 tick (0.03) at 103-13 (103.41) and 2.0 UMBS are up 5 ticks (.16) at 101-24 (101.75).

Here are a few of the Fed wires:

- FED'S KAPLAN SAYS HE WOULD BE AGAINST NEGATIVE INTEREST RATES
- FED'S KAPLAN SAYS NEGATIVE INTEREST RATES WOULD IMPACT INTERMEDIARIES, MONEY MARKET FUNDS
- KAPLAN SAYS HE IS SKEPTICAL THAT NEGATIVE INTEREST RATES WOULD HAVE BENEFITS THAT WOULD OUTWEIGH HARM
- RICHMOND FED'S BARKIN: FISCAL RESPONSE HAS BEEN EXTENSIVE BUT "SUSPECT MORE NEEDS TO GET DONE" AS RECOVERY LIKELY TO BE SLOWER THAN FIRST THOUGHT
- BULLARD: NEGATIVE RATES NOT A GOOD OPTION FOR THE U.S.
- BULLARD: MORE LIKELY NEXT STEP FOR U.S. WOULD BE A MORE EXPLICIT RETURN TO QUANTITATIVE EASING TO KEEP INTEREST RATES LOW
