Lowest Rates Since May, But There's a Catch

Rates ended the week at the best levels since late May. That sounds pretty great, right?! Unfortunately, there's a fairly big catch.

The problem with the past month and a half is that the range has been excruciatingly narrow. In fact, if you've been in the market for a loan during that time, you probably haven't seen your quoted interest rate change at all.

The chart below only looks like it's moving in July because it is adjusted for small day-to-day changes in lenders' upfront costs. That's a bit of tricky topic because "upfront costs" mean different things to different people. In this case, it refers to the costs that correspond with any given rate on a lender rate sheet.

These upfront costs let us see mortgage rate movement even if the payment rate or "note rate" isn't moving. Think of them as fine-tuning adjustments.

Average Mortgage Rates

Why does any of that matter? In one sense, it prepares you to be appropriately cynical about next week's potential mortgage rate headlines. Beyond that, the sideways grind in rates is one of our industry's most visible manifestations of the uncertainty in broader financial markets.

Part of the uncertainty is due to the general realities of summertime trading--especially in the bond market (which underlies rates). A bigger driver of uncertainty is something we talked about in last week's newsletter: the implementation of tariffs on China and the fear of market backlash.

There's a visible reference to the uncertainty in the correlation between stocks and bonds heading into the end of last week. We often see both sides of the market huddle together with higher lows and lower highs, waiting for an indication of the next big move. The chart below shows that stocks quickly forgot about last week's fears while the jury is still out for bonds.

Stocks vs Bonds

So who's telling the truth here? Did stocks jump the gun or are bonds taking too much time to decide? As is often the case, zooming out a bit will tell us what we need to know. Incidentally, BOTH stocks and bonds are still in bigger-picture consolidation patterns for essentially all of 2018.

Stocks vs Bonds

In other words, neither side of the market is telling the truth OR lying. Both still aren't exactly sure which way the next move will go. If past precedent is any guide, we may be waiting to find out conclusively until the summertime trading slowdown ends in September. Either way, the presence of these consolidations greatly increases the odds of a bigger move on the horizon.

Update: Buyer Broker Agreement

After requests from real estate companies, a nonprofit consumer watchdog group the Consumer Federation of America has developed a list of factors to consider when creating a buyer contract in preparation for upcoming practice changes in the industry.

CFA released its "Proposed Criteria for Evaluating Home Buyer Contract Forms" on Tuesday. The 15 criteria focus on the contracts' form – whether the documents are readable and understandable – and content – whether they are fair to homebuyers.

- the document's expiration date (CFA recommends buyers asks for a three-month contract and never sign one longer than six months)
- the right to terminate the contract
- the disclosure that compensation is negotiable
- the broker's compensation clearly stated and that the buyer broker can't receive additional compensation for facilitating a sale
- that any additional fees, such as for showing a home, will be deducted from the broker's commission if there is a successful sale
- that the commission is due only if there is a successful closing
- that buyers have an obligation – for no longer than 60 days, CFA recommends – to pay a broker who earlier showed them a home they purchased after the contract ended
- seller concessions paid directly to buyers
- dual agency not pre-approved by the contract
- an explanation of how a broker treats different buyer clients interested in the same property
- that buyers should not be required to first go through mediation or arbitration if they have a complaint
