Mortgage Rates Aren't Too Far From 3 Year Lows

If we stopped paying attention at noon on Thursday, it was an uneventful week due to an absence of important economic data, a holiday closure, and a lack of volatility in the underlying bond market. After that, things got interesting.

To be fair, things were fairly interesting at the end of the previous week owing to an escalation in trade war tensions with China. With minutes to go on Friday, Trump announced a new 100% tariff that sent stocks and bond yields screaming lower. By the end of this week, yields bounced after Trump walked those comments back, but not before some serious volatility on Thursday.

Warning: the next 2 paragraphs are unavoidably esoteric, but the takeaway is simple.

Things changed precipitously just after noon ET on Thursday. Investors had been bracing for more serious fallout after Zions Bancorp announced it would take a $50 million loss in Q3 due to bad loans. A separate bank, Western Alliance, also announced hefty write-downs tied to similar loans.

The juxtaposition of the news and the involvement of some big-name Wall St firms created significant volatility in short-term interest rates. That volatility was complex due to competing implications for the broader economy (good for rates) and short-term funding markets (bad for rates). When more dire concerns about short-term funding markets didn't materialize, the net effect was a delayed reaction that ultimately helped the entire spectrum of interest rates move lower.

Because bond yields correlate with mortgage rates, it was no surprise to see them moving lower in tandem over the holiday weekend. But at that point, mortgage rates were only beginning to break below the flat, narrow range that's persisted since the week of the Fed rate cut in September. Thursday's bond market volatility added to those gains, bringing the average lender closer to last month's lows.

Incidentally, those recent lows are the effective lower bound going all the way back to late 2022.

The incoming week brings the release of the Consumer Price Index (CPI). This will be the first major exception in terms of government economic data releases during the shutdown. While CPI isn't quite as big of an influence as the still-on-hold jobs report, it will nonetheless be one of the most tradeable calendar events for rates in several weeks. As always, there's no way to know if it will help or hurt until the report comes out.

A Lower Price or a Lower Rate? Don't Guess. Compare: 10-22-2026

What Every Agent Should Know:---

With mortgage rates challenging affordability and buyers hesitant to make decisions, sellers are increasingly willing to negotiate. But here's a question every REALTOR® should consider:---

Is your buyer better off negotiating a lower purchase price—or asking the seller to contribute toward a permanently lower interest rate?---

A price reduction lowers the mortgage balance, but the resulting monthly payment savings may be surprisingly small.---

Alternatively, a seller contribution toward a permanent interest-rate buydown could provide substantially greater monthly payment relief, even with a higher purchase price.---

But what if mortgage rates decline in the next 6, 12, or 24 months?---

That's the question nobody can answer with certainty.---

A buyer who negotiates a larger price reduction may benefit from a lower loan balance and potentially refinance if rates decline. A buyer who secures a permanently lower rate benefits immediately, without depending on future market conditions.---

Both strategies have merit. The right answer depends on the numbers, the buyer's financial priorities, and how long they expect to keep the mortgage.---

For listing agents, this creates another negotiating opportunity. A seller contribution toward financing costs may be more attractive to a payment-conscious buyer than another reduction in asking price.---

Before your buyer requests a price reduction—or your seller agrees to one—give me a call.---

Let's compare the alternatives. Sometimes the smartest negotiation isn't about the price. It's about how the transaction is structured.---
