New Construction Beginning at a Quicker Pace Despite Decline in Permits

Housing permits were down in February, wiping out the gains posted in January, while housing starts also reversed course, posting the year's first gains. All three of the housing measures in the residential construction report from the U.S. Census Bureau and the Department of Housing and Urban Development posted increases over the previous February.

Today's construction report says privately-owned permits for residential construction dropped by 6.2 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1,213,000 compared to a revised rate of 1,293,000 in January. The January revision was from an originally reported rate of 1,285,000. February's number was 4.4 percent higher than the rate of permitting a year earlier, estimated at 1,162,000 units.

Analysts had expected a downturn in permitting, but a much smaller one. The consensus of those polled by Econoday was for an annual rate of 1,270,000 units. The actual number was below the lowest estimates which ranged from 1,235,000 to 1,290,000.

Permits for single family construction however were higher than in January, 832,000, up from a revised estimate (from 808,000) of 807,000, a 31 percent increase, and up a 13.5 percent from the previous February. Multi-family permitting was fell by 26.9 percent from the previous month, at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 334,000 compared to 457,000 in January, and was 15.7 percent lower on an annual basis.

On a non-adjusted basis, there were 84,500 permits issued during the month compared to 87,300 in January. There were 57,800 single-family permits issued, up from 53,600 the previous month.

Update: Buyer Broker Agreement

After requests from real estate companies, a nonprofit consumer watchdog group the Consumer Federation of America has developed a list of factors to consider when creating a buyer contract in preparation for upcoming practice changes in the industry.

CFA released its "Proposed Criteria for Evaluating Home Buyer Contract Forms" on Tuesday. The 15 criteria focus on the contracts' form – whether the documents are readable and understandable – and content – whether they are fair to homebuyers.

- the document's expiration date (CFA recommends buyers asks for a three-month contract and never sign one longer than six months)
- the right to terminate the contract
- the disclosure that compensation is negotiable
- the broker's compensation clearly stated and that the buyer broker can't receive additional compensation for facilitating a sale
- that any additional fees, such as for showing a home, will be deducted from the broker's commission if there is a successful sale
- that the commission is due only if there is a successful closing
- that buyers have an obligation – for no longer than 60 days, CFA recommends – to pay a broker who earlier showed them a home they purchased after the contract ended
- seller concessions paid directly to buyers
- dual agency not pre-approved by the contract
- an explanation of how a broker treats different buyer clients interested in the same property
- that buyers should not be required to first go through mediation or arbitration if they have a complaint
